THIS IS UNEVALUATED INFORMATION

1. The Chinese Communists are composed of two major groups: One group is the military commanders and the second group consisting of the pro-Soviet political workers.
2. The pro-Soviet group is exerting pressure on the conservative group to enter the Korean conflict. The conservative group feels that to do so would merely invite more trouble on top of their present difficulties in handling the Chinese guerrillas, the big flood disaster, the discontentment of the people due to economic inefficiencies, food shortages, and difficulties of controlling southern China. This group does, however, favor the stationing of troops on the North Korean border as a potential threat to the United Nations forces.
